

CNN Transcript 1/28/10; Wolf Blitzer; The Situation Room

"Let's check in with CNN's Tom Foreman right now. He's over at the stimulus desk.

You're doing some research on some projects in Nevada, Tom? What's going on?

TOM FOREMAN, CNN ANCHOR AND CORRESPONDENT: You know, Wolf, what you and Kate were talking about a minute ago is exactly what we're finding all over the country.

Let's fly into Nevada here. We're going to talk about a company there that received between $500,000 and $600,000 to do some work there. The name of this company, as I pulled it out over here, is Carpenter's Sellers Architects.

Now they were hired to do a variety of jobs here including retrofitting some fire stations -- not this one, but some like it -- with green energy solar panels, that sort of thing. That job they said went very, very well.

They also built a visitor center and built a fireman's barracks out near the Black Rock Desert up near Reno, the site of the famous Burning Man Festival, if you know anything about that.

And they say this really worked for them because this $500,000 to $600,000 saved five jobs -- people who they say they would have otherwise lost -- and they say it created two or three more. Their math is a little fuzzy on that.

But all in all, as we move past the stimulus desk here, I can tell you that this is the kind of work the White House really wants people to see, because they're saying, look at this. Five to seven or eight jobs overall either saved or created.

That's what we're finding in these books in some of these projects. That gets people very, very excited, because they say that's a real payoff here. And if you do the math on that, that comes out to about $80,000 per job, equipment, the supplies, everything for these people to do this.

That's what the government wants to see. So, our stimulus desk total so far, we roll it up, we've now checked out more than $8,206,000,000 worth of your tax money being spent on projects like this. And as we said all along, Wolf, you can look at these project that we've done out in Nevada. The one that Kate looked there in Indiana. Decide for yourself if that's the way you want your tax money spent. Wolf?

BLITZER: And we can always go to CNN.com/stimulus and get more information on what's going on. Our investigation will continue, Tom."